

WHAT DO YOU DO ABOUT CRAPPY SERVICE?

Do you have the nerve to get up and leave? I do. In fact, that is what I did at lunch. Our group headed over to the local Tumbleweed for lunch. There were six of us altogether. They have a special lunch menu designed to get you in and out quickly. At least that is what it is designed for. It helps if you don't get crappy service.

We got there around 11:45 and were told it would be about fifteen minutes. So we grabbed a spot at the bar, figuring that maybe we would eat there. But we also noticed the patio was empty and asked if it was closed. The bartender asked a waitress if she would like a table and if she could take care of his "peeps". I shit you not, we were now his peeps.

Just as we walk out, another big group goes in front of us. Right then we knew we were in trouble. We are the third group out there. Our waitress gets the other group and then comes over for our order. We place our order around noon. At about 12:10, we notice that our drinks have yet to come. One girl gets up to check it out. She tells us the drinks are sitting on the bar. She tried to bring them to us but they wouldn't let her. The drinks don't arrive for another five minutes.

Maybe when the waitress keeps giving you bowls of chips and salsa, it's a telltale sign that you are getting screwed. At 12:25, my friend goes over to talk to a manager. He tells us we will be taken care of. Whatever that means.

At 12:30, we are offered more chips and salsa. I could have used another margarita at that point. At 12:40, another girl in the group decides we have had enough. We can't wait anymore. I agree with her and stand up, putting on my sunglasses. As we turn to leave, our food now shows up. It has been forty minutes since we placed the order.

We start out the door just to watch the other four people in our group stay behind to eat. WTF? If I am getting shit service, I will let them know and walk out. I can't believe these people stayed behind. They talked tough but when the time came to make a stand, they sat and took it. One of them is a cheap sonofabitch anyway. I bet he got them to package up the burgers we ordered so he could eat them for supper.
