

it's over /5/ blame ayahuasca

Goodness, maybe this is self-pity. I apologize. I started my career as a _____ in Chicago, for the director of marketing for a _____ global company with 30,000 employees. When she got _____, she _____ me on to be her full-time “executive assistant.”

After a while, a friend convinced me I had more _____ than _____ and _____ me hired as an “associate consultant” for another giant company, and then eventually I got promoted to “consultant,” and then I _____ a “content manager” and then an “associate producer” for multimedia-based training products, and then I _____ up working as a “project manager” for web application development and web projects.

Time elapsed: about five years, _____ or take, and somewhere _____ the way, I got the idea to start my own company, and so I became “CEO & Artistic Director.” For a while, I _____ to walk _____ the street _____ at the idea that I was a CEO. The idea _____ the company came to me in the middle of a heavy experience _____ homemade ayahuasca, but that’s probably another story _____.
