

it's over /7/ signing off

I'm twenty eight years old. I don't _____ at the helm of a company, and it's clear to me now that that's one of the _____ reasons our business plan met with such little success.

I am at a complete _____ , and I spend my days waiting for something to happen. The developers can _____ developing, our president can keep making phone calls. This meeting tomorrow could go well; _____ are, it will go _____ fine but they won't _____ to anything and we will shut _____ before the end of the month, go our _____ ways, and look back on this _____ we choose. I'm the only one who has to answer to those investors, of course, and god knows my old boss is going to kick my _____ for losing his money.

I'm going to go back to consulting, make enough money to pay _____ my debt, try to get _____ my life without such enormous ambitions. I think it's easiest if I just _____ computers. I _____ hate computers.

Signing off, Scott.

ass » belong » blame » chances » commit »
 down » fucking » however » just » keep » loss » major » off » on with » separate