

Ruby Monday (2) The Daughter

AUGGIE: All right, sugar, what's on your mind? Do me _____ and keep it short, will you?

RUBY: Don't give me that look, Auggie. It gives me _____. Look, I need you to help me out.

AUGGIE: Help, huh? I don't suppose this help has anything _____ with you being _____ and needing money, does it?

RUBY: Don't rush me, okay? You're _____ conclusions before I've even said anything. And _____, it's not for me. It's for our daughter.

AUGGIE: Our daughter? Is that what you said? Our daughter? I mean, you might have a daughter, but I sure _____ don't. And even if I did -- _____ I don't -- she wouldn't be our daughter. She would be mine and you wouldn't know about her.

RUBY: Her name is Felicity, and she just _____ eighteen. She ran away from Pittsburgh last year, and now she's living in some _____ here in Brooklyn with a guy named Chico. She's strung out on crack, four months pregnant. I can't _____ think about that baby. She's having our grandchild, Auggie. Just think of it. Our grandchild.

AUGGIE: _____ off already. Just stop all this crap right now. Was that your idea to call her Felicity?

RUBY: It means "happiness."

AUGGIE: I know what it means. That still doesn't make it a good name.

RUBY: Forget about the name. It's not what _____. If you turn me down, she's as good as dead. And so is the baby.

AUGGIE: You've _____ me before, darling, remember? Why the hell should I believe you now?

RUBY: Why would I lie to you? You think it was easy to walk into this place? I wouldn't come here if I didn't have to. I don't know who else to turn to, Auggie.

AUGGIE: That's what you told me when I shoplifted that necklace for you. You remember, baby, don't you? The judge gave me a choice: _____ go to jail or join the army.
