

my son's after-school job /3/ child labor rules

Eugene has always _____ to help _____ the house. He is _____ offering to cook supper for his parents ("No, no, really, we're not hungry") and bringing us cups of tea and coffee _____ we politely _____ to drink and then secretly _____ down the sink _____ he's out of _____.

Eugene also has a highly _____ commercial _____. Unlike _____ children, he is _____ of the price of everything. When he _____ that wine was _____ cheaper in Spain than it is here, he _____ on spending his pocket money buying three bottles of it. This was not _____ he wanted to drink it, but because he simply couldn't pass up such a bargain. He's now _____ to sell it at a decent _____ - and I get the feeling I know who the first buyer will be.

All this clearly _____ be encouraged. Child labor is an excellent idea for both parents and children. It _____ the young an interest and _____ them out of the house. Moneywise, it is a _____ for the parents as well. And it _____ very well _____ out to be the beginning of a successful career for the kid.

I _____ it a great _____ to have two of my four sons _____ for pay - _____ both of them are still at school. If you _____ to know of any jobs for a seven-year-old and a nine-year-old boy, feel _____ to _____ me a call.
