

paul's christmas story (1) sit down my friend

AUGGIE: How's the work going these _____ ?

PAUL: Fine. Or it was going fine until a couple of days _____. A guy from The New York Times called and asked me to write a Christmas story. They're going to publish it on Christmas Day.

AUGGIE: That's wonderful. I'm happy _____ you.

PAUL: Yeah, great. The problem is, I have four days to _____ up with something, and I don't have a single idea. I was _____ if maybe you know anything about Christmas stories?

AUGGIE: Christmas stories? Sure, I know a _____ of them.

PAUL: But the thing is, I need a really good _____ this time. This is the New York Times we're talking about.

AUGGIE: Are you kidding? I'll _____ you what. Sit down, my friend, and I'll tell you the best Christmas story you've ever heard. And I _____ every word of it is true.

PAUL: It doesn't really _____ to be true. It just has to be good.

AUGGIE: Have I ever told you a story that wasn't good? Here's the best one so _____. Ready?

PAUL: I'm all ears.

AUGGIE: Okay. You remember how you once asked me how I started taking pictures? Well, this is the story _____ how I got my first camera. In fact, it's the only camera I've ever had. Are you _____ me so far?

PAUL: Every word.
